MAXJET AIRWAYS LAUNCHES NEW LONDON STANSTED TO LAS VEGAS ROUTE ON NOVEMBER 2, 2006

- Business class fares start at just £999 return -

London (August 25, 2006) — MAXjet Airways the all-business-class transatlantic airline, launches a new twice-weekly flight on Mondays and Thursdays from London Stansted to Las Vegas. The inaugural flight leaves from London Stansted on Thursday November 2, 2006.

Business class fares start at just £999 return, including all government taxes and fees and ticket sales begin on Friday September 2.

The new non-stop scheduled service departs London Stansted at 1:00 p.m. and arrives in Las Vegas McCarran International Airport at 5:00 p.m. the same day. The flight from Las Vegas to London Stansted leaves at 7:30 p.m. and arrives in London at 12:30 p.m. the next day. This means that MAXjet will be offering the only evening non-stop service from Las Vegas to London.

CEO Gary Rogliano said: "The UK is the second largest market to visit Las Vegas and we are responding to customer demand for an affordable non-stop business class service from London. The addition of this new route also means that connections to and from US west coast are now much easier."

Terry Morgan, managing director of London Stansted Airport, said: "MAXjet continues to go from strength to strength and the launch of this new route to Las Vegas from London Stansted is the best possible news. MAXjet passengers will now be able to travel between three of the most popular destinations in the US, with virtually unlimited connections throughout the US and over 160 destinations throughout the UK and Europe."

Morgan continues: "MAXjet is a highly valued customer and business partner of London Stansted Airport, and we are just as excited as they are about this further growth in their route network. Everyone here passes to Gary Rogliano and his team our warmest congratulations and we look forward to helping make this new route a great success."

In addition to adding the Las Vegas flights to its passenger schedule, MAXjet has taken the opportunity to revise its existing schedule with later departure times from New York, Washington D.C. and London. The schedule change will be effective October 1, 2006. The six weekly New York flights will depart from London Stansted at 11.45 am and the return flight will leave JFK at 8:15 p.m. From Washington D.C., MAXjet's four weekly flights will now depart Stansted at 3:00 p.m and the return will depart Dulles at 8:30 p.m. A complete schedule can be found on the MAXjet Web site.

"We decided to adjust our departures times following feedback received from our customers," continued Gary Rogliano. "The later departure times will give passengers more time to complete business over in the US and to avoid rush hour, but to still arrive in London the following day in time for a business lunch."

MAXjet is the only airline to design an extensive and dedicated connectivity section on its Web site in order to assist its passengers with connections. Customers can now easily build the most convenient travel schedule for themselves, based on MAXjet's own departure and arrival times. The section, which will be revised to accommodate the new schedule effective October 1, provides step-by-step instructions on how to create connections to hundreds of destinations across North America and Europe. For details, go to www.maxjet.com and link from "Connecting On MAXjet."

MAXjet currently operates six weekly flights between New York JFK and London Stansted, and four weekly flights between Washington Dulles and London Stansted. With the planned addition of new aircraft in 2007, the airline plans to open new scheduled service to London from a number of major markets in key U.S. destinations.
